ings — like the kinds of cars the victims were in and things like that," Slaughter said of John Carr.

"I told all this to a New York detective who called me and asked me about John shortly after his (John Carr's) death. I don't remember his (the detective's) name," Slaughter said.

Another Carr associate in North Dakota said of the Carr-Berkowitz relationship, "John never said exactly what it was that came between them, except that there was bad blood after awhile."

According to police sources in Minot, N.D., John Carr was talking about Berkowitz as early as February, 1977 — six months before Berkowitz' arrest.

The significance of the early link between Berkowitz and John Carr was explained by one New York City homicide detective who was a member of the "Son of Sam" task force:

"Them knowing each other gives a good explanation for the name 'Son of Sam' and answers a lot of questions about the Borrelli letter. There was too much intimate knowledge of the Carr family in it that Berkowitz shouldn't have been able to know by himself."

In that letter, addressed to New York City Police Inspector Joseph Borrelli and dropped at the scene of a double-homicide in April, 1977, the writer called himself "Son of Sam" and described Sam (Carr's) garage, house and attic and made pointed references to Sam's heart condition.

The authorship of the Borrelli letter is an lingering question. Another is why, according to North Dakota police, John Carr closely resembled a sketch of the "Son of Sam" killer that was released following two murders that occurred at a time when Carr had returned to New York from North Dakota.

In an attempt to answer those questions, New York police, it has been learned, were seeking to establish a link between John Carr and Berkowitz prior to Carr's death in 1978. Despite official denials at that time, police had been seeking to question Carr.

"The detective I talked to told me Carr had been wanted for questioning," Slaughter said.

"I was there the day he got a call tipping him off that the cops were looking for him," said one of Carr's friends in North Dakota. "I believe it was in the fall of 1977. John just laid low. I don't know why the police never found him."

But, police were never able to locate Carr to question him prior to his death.

Police sources in Yonkers said that they were advised that Carr was "traveling around the country and couldn't be reached...that he might have been in Texas or something."

Carr, however, was in Minot at the time. But he was not exclusively in Minot.

Authorities say that Carr was "back and forth to New York several times during the period from October, 1976 until February, 1977. There were two "Son of Sam" shootings during this time and John Carr "closely resembled" a sketch of the killer released at that time, North Dakota police sources said.

In late January, 1978, following Berkowitz' arrest, Carr drove to New York, telling North Dakota associates he wouldn't return until August. But two weeks later, on February 14, he abruptly flew back — leaving his car in Yonkers. Two days later, John Carr was dead.

Carr was found shot to death in a friend's apartment on the Minot Air Force Base. His body was lying face down on the bedroom floor, his skull demolished by a slug from a 30-30 Marlin rifle, with the gun lying across the back of his legs. The bullet had been fired into his mouth at point-blank range.

"It looked like suicide and it might have been. It appears that with the tie to Berkowitz, he would have had good reason to do himself in," said Terry Gardner, a deputy sheriff in Ward County, N.D. "But, with the position of the body and the gun, we saw how it could have been murder made to look like suicide."

"We had never really closed the case, but were lacking a motive for murder," Gardner said. "We now have a motive."

Gardner said, "We are cooperating with New York's investigation. We are looking into Carr's death, his involvement with the occult and Berkowitz. I can't go any further than that."

Minot authorities have described John Carr as a "devil worshipper," and police in New York, aware of numerous occult references in the "Son of Sam" letters and other information, are investigating the possibility the killings were occult-motivated, Minot officials say.

Two weeks ago, Gardner, who is assigned to the case, was a near-victim of a sniper attack as a shot barely missed his head. "That kind of thing is very unusual around here. I can't say it had anything to do with this case but it may have," he said.

And last week, Michael Carr, the other son of Sam Carr, was killed when his car ran off the West Side Highway in Manhattan. As John Carr's brother, Michael was also one of several subjects of the new probe, Minot police sources say. Yonkers police sources said New York City police had surveillance at Michael Carr's wake.

Also last week, one the same day Carr was killed, a police informant who was an associate of John Carr was run off the road in Minot.

And, in still another bizarre incident in Minot two nights ago, a friend of John Carr — who had been questioned by the police several times recently — nearly died in a suicide attempt. "There was a note that advised, 'believe in God,'" Gardner said.

The story of Carr's death and his probable (though not then confirmed) connection to Berkowitz was published by two of these writers on February 22, 1978. The article was promptly discounted by police and the Brooklyn District Attorney's Office.

However, even as the police were then publicly denying any link between Carr, Berkowitz and the "John Wheaties" alias,

John Carr became an item on police teletypes and telephones.

On February 21, 1978, the Westchester County Sheriffs Department cabled Minot authorities to send to New York "copies of investigation, any photos or photos found in residence revealing any connection or possible connection with New York or residents of New York. Also the copies of statements you have from friends... Official letter of request in mail to your jurisdiction this date..." the teletype — a copy of which has been obtained by these newspapers — read.

Another teletype, on February 22, advised Minot authorities, "This department believes family of John C. Carr...homicide jurisdiction enroute to your jurisdiction in attempt to regain or take possession of personal property of victim Carr. This property presently impounded by ur (sic) dept. for this dept. Do not release to family...Repeat do not release to family."

Sources in the Westchester Sheriffs Department say any information and material they received was then forwarded to the Brooklyn D.A.'s office.

In addition, New York authorities had surveillance units at John Carr's funeral in Yonkers, these newspapers have learned.

Meanwhile, the public posture that Berkowitz had no possible accomplices was maintained by New York officials.

Earlier this year, these newspapers published a series of articles on the Yonkers police and Westchester Sheriffs Department handling of the local Berkowitz case, involving crimes in his Yonkers neighborhood.

The last of these articles, on March 1, detailed several of the many contradictions and problems still surrounding the "Son of Sam" case and challenged the assertion that Berkowitz acted alone.

Subsequent to that article, an investigator interviewed Mrs. Florence Larsen, a volunteer animal placement worker, at the 50th Police Precinct in the Bronx for nearly two hours about material in the story.

In August, 1977, two days before Berkowitz' arrest, Mrs. Larsen took two phone calls about a German shepherd dog she had advertised for adoption. One of the callers said he was "David Berkowitz of 35 or 50 Pine St., Yonkers," and the other said he "fixed cars" (or Carrs) behind Pine Street in Yonkers.

Larsen advised "Berkowitz" and the other caller the dog could be seen at a Mamaroneck kennel. The next day, two men showed up to see the dog, together. The kennel attendant identified one of them as Berkowitz and said the other bore a strong resemblance to the long-haired police sketch of "Son of Sam."

Police later said Berkowitz didn't visit the kennel, but had no explanation as to who might have called using his name to inquire about a German shepherd.

Numerous German shepherds were found slain in Berkowitz' neighborhood, including several well after his arrest. These newspapers have learned that police feel the dogs may have been killed as part of Satanic rituals involving people connected to Berkowitz.

Berkowitz, in an interview attended by one of these writers, strongly denied killing any of the shepherds, but added that he had "a good idea who did it."

Larsen, questioned by authorities last month, said the investigator showed her a copy of the Gannett article containing information about a probable accomplice in the 44-killings and told her, "We're going to investigate this article and all the information in it point by point."

"He had me repeat my whole part in the case," Larsen said, "and he asked me if everything about my role was true as you (Gannett) printed it. He had me read it and I told him it was true," she said.

"He couldn't understand why all of it wasn't in the files and I told him it was just as I told it to the police at the time. He took down all sorts of information about me, my family, the calls about the shepherd, the dead shepherds in Yonkers, and other people involved in the case that I knew," Mrs. Larsen said.

"He told me you (Gannett) were stirring up a lot of trouble and that he'd just been assigned to the case and that he'd be getting back to me again," she added.

The question facing the police today as they delve into the case again: How many "Sons of Sam" were there?

contributing will face some sort of retribution."

Also in the packet was a drawn facsimile of a computer card the employee says the utility is using to keep record of employee contributions.

Tom Bush, a spokesman for Con Ed, conceded that the Hauspurg memo, dated Sept. 18, was sent to the 5,000 managerial employees and that the utility was using the computer cards.

However, he disputed allegations that the utility was seeking to coerce contributions to Westchester Citizens Against Government Takeover, the group leading the campaign against the ballot proposal that Westchester create a municipal electric company that could replace Con Ed.

"We're not coercing contributions," he said. "There will be no run off of the computer cards, it was not necessary to return the cards. The cards will all be destroyed." He said they were used to ease contribution reporting procedures required by state election law and an employees decision to contribute or not to contribute to the campaign will "have no effect on any aspect of his employment."

But DelBello said the issue merits an investigation by the state because the son-in-law of one of his aides who works for the utility has substantiated the charges of coercion. He did not identify the staff member.

Obituaries

August V. Rizzolla

August V. Rizzolla, 60, former Army photographer who served in the European and Pacific theaters of operations in World War II and was at one time associated with his father, Michael Angelo Rizzolla in Rizzolla Photo Service here, died Monday at Carmel Community Hospital in Carmel, Calif.

"Gus" Rizzolla, a native of Yonkers, carried on the photo service after the death in 1967 of his father, a former photographer for the Yonkers Statesman and the Herald Statesman. He enlisted in the Army in the mid-1930s, attained the rank of sergeant and served in North Africa, Sicily and Algiers before being assigned to a Signal Corps Unit, part of an advanced combat unit, in Italy in 1943. From there he went to the Pacific Theater of Operations.

Early in the war, Sgt. Rizzolla was assigned to take photos of the raid on Dieppe, later to cover the North African invasion and went on to Salerno and Anzio and was one of the photographers taking newsreels of the bombing of Cassino, Italy.

Sgt. Rizzolla jumped with the 504th Paratroop Regiment at Sicily and for a time served on the staff of Chiang Kai-Shek.

After the war, he received an honorable discharge and went to work in Hollywood but re-enlisted in the Army and was a master sergeant and chief recruiting publicity photographer for the Army at Governors Island.

It was Gus' face that smiled from thousands of Army recruiting posters on display all over the country in the late 1940s. He had been assigned to take a photo for recruiting posters and was working with his "model" but couldn't get him to strike the right pose. Gus, to show what he wanted, posed for the "model" who took the picture the Army used.

On an Army assignment in 1950, cold weather tests atop Mount Washington in New Hampshire, coldest spot in the United States, Sgt. Rizzolla met Sir Hubert Wilkins, noted Arctic explorer. A picture of the two discussing the intricate mechanism of Gus' movie camera appeared in The Herald Statesman.

Sgt. Rizzolla earned the Distinguished Service Medal, Soldier's Medal, Air Medal with four clusters, Purple Heart with one cluster, American Theater, American Defense, European and Pacific Theaters of War Medals and the Victory Medal.

He was born July 6, 1919, attended School 5, Commerce High and Saunders Trades and Technical High Schools and was "photographer at large" for the Yonkers Council of Churches at one time.

He also was graduated from the U.S. Army School of Photographers at Mitchel Field, L.I., and was a camp photographer at Fort Dix, N.J.

Mr. Rizzolla retired from the Army in 1962 and, with his wife, the former Anastasia Studym, moved to California 15 years ago. He was a photographer at the White Sands Missile Range in California until his retirement two years ago and had been a stringer photographer for the Associated Press in California.

While in Yonkers, he was a photographer for the Catholic News and served other newspapers in the area and pictorially covered major sports, political and community events.

Surviving are his wife, two daughters, Emilia E. Rizzolla of Willow Grove, Pa., and Leonora M. McCurdy of Quaker Town, Pa.; a son, Jack V. of Kissimmee, Fla.; three stepchildren, Pamela Pearce of Pleasantville and William and Kevin Michael Hayes of Carmel, Calif.; three sisters, Barbara Glascock and Frances Agurkis of Jacksonville, Fla., and Marion of Long Island and seven grandchildren.

Mr. Rizzolla was predeceased by two brothers, Army Technical Sgt. Emil J. Rizzolla who was killed in action in Iwo Jima in 1945 and Chief Aviation Photographer's Mate Leonard M. Rizzolla, USN, who died in an auto crash in Virginia in 1956. Leonard was a member of Adm. Richard Byrd's expedition to the South Pole in 1946 and made two subsequent trips to the North Pole taking photos for the Navy.

John F. Walsh Sr.

John F. Walsh Sr., 75, of Yonkers, a former shipping expeditor for the Phelps Dodge Wire and Cable Corp., died Thursday at Yonkers General Hospital following a short illness.

Born January 15, 1905, Mr. Walsh was a lifelong resident of Yonkers, and had worked for Phelps Dodge for 25 years prior to retirement in 1971. Prior to working for Phelps Dodge, he was employed by General Motors in Tarrytown.

He was a member of St. Joseph's Church, the Yonkers Lodge of Elks, and for 17 years served as secretary for Local No. 3 of the Electrical Workers union in Yonkers.

He attended St. Joseph's school and Yonkers High School.

He is survived by his wife, the former Irene Benirsto; a son, John F. Walsh Jr., of Yonkers; a daughter, Mrs. Sol (Jean) Salberg of Hurleyville, N.Y.; four grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren.

He was the brother of the late Joseph and Theodore Walsh and the late Helen Allen and Mary Hughes.

In a one-page statement, Martinelli said that he is not involved with the commission and its membership but that the resignations were "ill advised" and there was and is no need for them.

The commission was established by the City Council and the liaison between it and the city council is the council's Education Committee. The committee's chairman, Councilman Harry Oxman, D-4, denied Ghimenti's and Porcari's charges Thursday.

"We do want the commission to have clout and we don't want just a symbol," Oxman said. "I feel bad about the commission resigning but the city just doesn't have the money to allocate to the commission."

Ghimenti emphatically disagrees with that contention, which other city officials voice also.

"The city knows one thing — if it doesn't want something and wants to get rid of it, it says there is no money," Ghimenti said. "But when the city wants something, the money is found. If the commission were a priority, the money would be found."

The controversy over the commission centers on its staff. Settling overall policy and appointed by the City Council are the 15 unpaid volunteers who resigned Thursday. Heading the staff is Ghimenti, who will resign his $22,500-a-year post today.

A while ago, Ghimenti said, the staff consisted of three investigators, an "intake" person to receive complaints and a secretary. The staff was paid with city funds until the city's fiscal problems and now the staff consisted of CETA employees.

But, Ghimenti pointed out, a new federal regulation states that CETA employees can only work 18 months in a CETA position. The terms of the current ceta employees on the commission gradually ended until the last two left on Sept. 29, leaving only Ghimenti and a typist.

The city has offered to assign two new CETA employees to the commission, an offer which Ghimenti and Porcari call useless.
